notual sheets of the Morning News. The paper was "mounted" on some light fabric, and the frilling, flouncing, and every other detail were constructed just as if made of satin or silk. The effect is described as having been really good. A whole evening's dancing did not seem to have injured it in the least, and many of the poets expressed a wish to have it photographed, as it would undoubtedly form a curiosity both in art and literature, for, with a good magnifying glass the actual news of the various sheets could be easily perused.
